CURRICULUM VITAE

Year of birth: 1981

Intro

I am a full professor in Semantics at Radboud University Nijmegen. In my research I address bigger questions about language and communication, and I'm always keen to develop new ways to tackle older and newer issues. I am eager to learn new techniques and to bring together researchers from different fields. As such, my research combines insights and techniques from a range of disciplines. In my Veni project on speech reports and my ERC Starting Grant project on perspective in language, I combined the fields of semantics and pragmatics, philosophy of language, classical scholarship on Ancient Greek, computational linguistics, experimental linguistics and narratology. In my current research I investigate how we undertake, attribute and avoid commitments through language. As part of this, I am currently leading a proof-of-method study to investigate the potential of fEMG (facial electromyography, the recording of facial muscle activity) as a window into this aspect of communication which forms the backbone of our social lives.

Research topics:

- commitments in communication
- perspective in language and narratology
- indexicality
- evidentiality
- speech and attitude reports
- tense
- aspect
- performativity
